weiner notified a policeman and an ambulance came from Believue Hospital. "Unser Charley" recovered consciousness, as they carried him down to burn in the craxy sheet iron stove that was their most important article of furniture. Just the stove and one big bed and one chair there were in that bare rusmi; but most important the stove. One day "Unser Charley" would bring home in a bucket, or even in the pockets of his ragged coat, coal enough for the might; the next day it was William who had to buy or steal the night's provends, for that sheet-iron stove.
